Mason County Records 6h10-Impor-tant Letter from Judge Pointey. The Republican Convention of Mason county, hent on the 21, adopted as a platform the spbetantial propositions of the Ohio county address, and sed upon it for House of Delegates Hon. Daniel Polsley, who has accepted. Mr. Polsley is a gentleman whose name is known all over the State. Helt was whose good Judgments State. He it was whose good judgments more perhaps than that of any other one man, gave shape to the May Convention and subsequent movements here in 1881. He was Licutenant Governor of the restored government, and was afterwards made Judge of the Mason Circuit. From this he was transferred to the House of Representatives in 1860. Mr. Polsley is a man of age, ability and rips experience. It is creditable to the good sense of Mason County Republicans that they choose such a man for the piace. And it is a gratifying evidence of a willinguess on his part to sacrifice.

And now it is all over we repeat what we said before it was over: that good polley on the part of the Republican party required this course. If they had practiced this treachery in Virginia, how could they have had the sifferentry to prelend to any character or descency hereafter?

THE DEROCKATIC BOURBONS. They Seither Forget nor Learn.

We have already mentioned the struggie in the Democratic party between the old and the new spirit, between the dogged retention of the old doctrines and policy and the saganious adoption of new measures in harmony with the actual situation. The signs of the contest abound on every side. The different tone of the platforms in the various States, and the character and antecedents of the candidates of which we spoke last week, all reyeal the want of a common conviction and a common purpose in the party. It begins to ap-From Harper's Weekly. purpose in the party. It begins to appear, however, that the progressiv wing of the party yields to the Bourbons, and that one more effort will be wing of the party yields to the Bourbons, and that one more effort will be made to protong the angry debate out of which the war sprang.

This contest in the Democratic party began with its organization under Jackson. General Jackson was substantially a Jeffersonian. He was its favor of a restriction of government to the lowest terms, and although he approved a tariff for defense, he was opposed to a national system of internal improvements and magnificent enterprises. Long before General Jackson thought of the Presidency, Mr. Calhoun, whose general political philosophy was much less agand than Jackson's, had fixed his beart upon it. His instinct indicated to him his chief rival, and during the Presidency of Monroe Mr. Calhoun was hostila to 'the hero,' who did not suspect it. Jackson's, election presently made Calhoun his open enemy. The first contest between them was the nallification movement of 1832, Jackson was honestly a Union map, and heartify despised as well as disbelieved the Southern theory of the government. His proclamation was as admirable and sound as Webster's 'speeches, and he made preparations to keep the peace and calores the law. In the latter resolution his party, supported him. But in his message of 1832, previous to the made preparations to keep the peace and enforce the law. In the latter resolution his party supported him. But in his message of 1833, previous to the proclamation, he virtually recommended the policy that Calhoun demanded. From the moment that Calhoun element in the Democratic party grew stronger, until it absolutely controlled it, and the war that was always latent in that element broke out.

The conduct and event of the war proyed that the people rejected the Calhoun theory while they destroyed slavery, for whose protection the theory was urged. The Democratic party, as a party, patsively opposed the war; and at its end the party organization remained. The internal conflict was therefore inevitable. There were the party traditions, the Southern alliance, and the hatred of the negro, with the old party leaders, apologists of slavery and supporters of the Virginia and Kentucky resolutions—in fact, the Calboun men, on one side; and on the other, the fresher element of the party, young proselytes who held philosophi-

Kentucky resolutions—in fact, the Calboun men, on one side; and on the other, the fresher element of the party, young prosslytes who held philosophically to the innited functions of the government, and who insisted upon abandoning the plainty closed issues of the last generation. Of this wing the New York World became the organ; a journal skillfully and intelligently managed, but, whose tone of light mockety has always paralysed its influence and destroyed its power.

In the Democratic National Convention of 1868 the two wings of the party met and tried conclusions. Calhoun respected in the isels as Wale Hampton, and he swept all before him. The New York managers had secured the meeting of the Convention in Tammany, Hall itself, and intended to secure their preference in the nomination. But the whiter the New York plotting the more conspicuous was the triumph of South Carolina. One of the ablest and most honorable of New York Democrats, Henry C. Murphy, reported the platform, and the New York trick of nominating the New Yorker, Horatio Seymour, succeeded. But Mr. Murphy's platform was repudiation, and Mr. Seymour, who had opposed repudiation at Tweddie Hall, accepted as his own the repudiating platform of Tammany. The question of the campaign, therefore, was simply whether the people would surrender the resolts of the war, and the election of General Grant was the answer.

of the war, and the election of General Grant was the answer.

The progressive wing of the party was compelled to submit to the Bourbons of the Convention, and their hopes of the prompt abandonment of old issues and a bold dash at the Inture in the nomination of Mr. Chare being bufflled, the progressives made a show of falling into line, but after the premontory thunder of Maine and Pennsylvalla-the World called for a change of front, which was a confession of ineviin this bear would become an object with mee of that kind the present in the world the present in the world the present in the world the

The passage of the Filteenth Amendment, which the World opposes, would formally close the great debate of the last generation; and the acquienceine in equal suffrage in this State by the adoption of the new Constitution would open the way for the consideration of new issues. The Bourbons have conquered the World, which has surrendered every advantage that the result of the Presidential election gave its. It hurrais for

It is like hurrans for Jackson and then for Caihoub. As for its Democratio readers, "Gentlement you pays your money santiakes your choice."

The question for the country then is, abail we put the negro out, of politics by completing the work which is nearly accomplished of securing his equal rights? Let the voters in this State, and in werry State, remember that the Bourtons insist upon dighting the same old bailte over again. We fought it in a way that they remember in 1880, "64, and "63. Let us show in "69 that there can be no radical change in parties until the question which divides them is settled.
